

Trans-American threatens to pull out of Standard Landfill contract

See related story Page 3A

BY ED LEPOMA

Unless Hancock County allows solid waste into the proposed Standard landfill from adjoining areas in Mississippi and Louisiana, the deal is off.

A vice-president of the firm that would operate the landfill said Trans-American Waste Industries Inc. would pull out of its management contract if attempts are made to limit its scope of operation.

Michael Harrelson, Director of Corporate Development, also disclosed terms of the contract that his firm has signed with the county's Solid Waste District via a telephone interview from Birmingham, Ala.

"Yes," said Harrelson. "I can tell you point blank we would pull out of the contract if we can't haul in enough (solid waste) to make it profitable."

Harrelson had attended Wednesday night's "public information forum" which the Solid Waste District called to answer citizens' questions about exactly what is planned at Standard.

The consensus coming out of that meeting was that most residents aren't opposed to a county landfill, but they want to look for an alternate site, and they want to limit who dumps solid waste in any landfill.

Some people at the meeting suggested that Standard be operated solely as a solid waste site for Hancock County. Others specifically objected to hauling in solid waste from nearby Washington and St. Tammany parishes.

On approving Standard as the site, Harrelson said, "It's time we do it or shake hands and walk away."

He said Hancock County generates only about 50 tons of solid waste a day, and it would be economically unfeasible for the county or Trans-American to operate a strictly-county landfill.

"Unless citizens want to up property tax millage to pay for it," said Harrelson. "The charge we would have to assess would be about $150 a ton."

Under a contract that expires next March, Hancock County now pays $20 a ton to Waste Management Inc. to take its solid waste to the Pecan Grove Landfill in Pass Christian.

Harrelson explained that profits of landfill operations are based on the total amounts hauled in, and what is charged to customers for disposing the solid waste.

He said Trans-American's contract with the Solid Waste District specifically allows the firm to bring in solid waste from "any area of Mississippi and nearby parishes in Louisiana."

To be profitable, Harrelson said Trans-American would have to haul into Standard between 300 and 350 tons of solid waste a day.

Harrelson also confirmed that Trans-American has been losing between $10 to $20,000 a month since it took over

County finalist for 'major manufacturer'

BY ED LEPOMA AND RICHARD MEEK

The Hancock County Board of Supervisors disclosed the county is on the verge of landing a "major manufacturer" who ultimately plans a $1.1 billion investment at Port Bienville Industrial Park.

The news was an emotional stroke on the back of the five supervisors who will leave office Jan. 2, and a shot in the arm to the five new supervisors, who will be taking their places.

The disclosure came when Hal Walters, Port and Harbor Director, asked supervisors to immediately approve $5 million in revenue bonds for improvements at Port Bienville.

District 4 Supervisor Wilmer Seymour, in an impassioned plea to fellow supervisors, said, "Gentlemen, this may well be the most important thing you will ever do for this county."

He said, as a lifelong resident of the county and, particularly as a supervisor, he has heard, "many young men ask me to find them a job. They would like to stay and live in Hancock County, but they can't find a decent job."

"Believe me, this will provide a lot of people good-paying jobs," said Seymour.

Cowand wants 'to make a difference'

Lisa Cowand will be the only woman and only Republican on the five-person Hancock County Board of Supervisors. Today, we profile her in the fifth installment of the series.

BY ED LEPOMA

Why would a mother of four growing children want to return to the political arena?

Lisa Cowand says it is because she wants to make a difference in the lives of Hancock County residents.

"I love politics, and I love being a team player," said Cowand. "I want to be part of finding a solution to some of our problems."

"If only one person says I made a difference, it will have been all worthwhile."

Cowand, besides the only woman and only Republican to serve on the new board, is also the most experienced in government affairs.

She was elected to the District 3 seat first in 1989 to serve out the remainder of an unexpired term. Running as a Democrat in an open primary, she beat out 12 other candidates.

Before that, she served on the Bay St. Louis City Council, representing Ward 1, from 1985 to 1988, and was Council president in 1988.

Oddly enough, Cowand's return to politics was at the expense of Democratic incumbent Howard Lizana, who beat her by 100 votes when she ran for a second term in 1992.

This time, Cowand used a strong base of support in her homebase of Cedar Point, and a large turnout of Republicans in the Diamondhead East precinct to edge Lizana out by 98 votes.

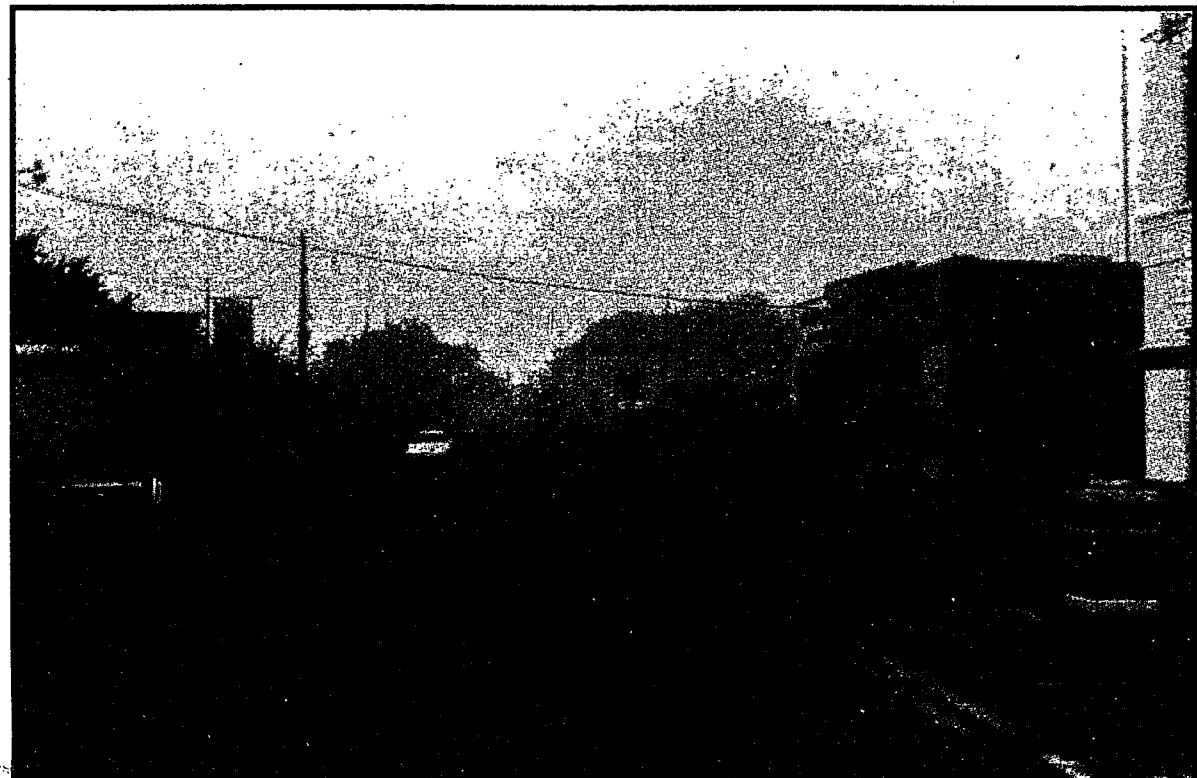

Cowand said she originally got into politics because she has children growing up here. She has been married the last 18 years to Norman Cowand, whose family were pioneers in the area. She grew up in New Orleans, but her family always had a summer home here.

Cowand is a graduate of Loyola University, and a certified dental assistant, having graduated from LSU's School of Dentistry.

The Cowands have four children: twin sons, Brian and Norman, both 14, and freshmen this year at St. Stanislaus; a 13-year-old daughter, Lawren, who's enrolled at Our Lady Academy; and a three-year-old son, Tyler.

Cowand works as a sales associate at Court Street Sta-

'Hot potato' to new board

BY ED LEPOMA

The outgoing Hancock County Board of Supervisors has thrown a political "hot potato" in the laps of the five new supervisors who will take office Jan. 2.

After a noisy and sometimes disorderly public hearing Friday, the board voted 4-0 to leave up to new supervisors the decision on whether the county should go ahead with a plan to provide sewage for most residents living south of I-10.

At the request of the county's Wastewater District, the board had advertised Friday's public hearing to hear residents' feelings on the District's plans to launch a $10 million project to link residents in Pearlinton and Shoreline Park to the county's sewage system.

The District wants to annex the area into its jurisdiction, so it can apply to the Farmers Home Administration for loans and grants that would pay up to 75 percent of the estimated $10 million cost of the project. It needs approval of supervisors to annex the area and proceed with the loan application.

The District held a public hearing in Pearlinton last September, and their plans met some resistance from residents, especially the elderly, who complained about the estimated $35 monthly charge, which would be assessed on residents.

Friday's meeting began before a Standing Room Only crowd jammed into the supervisors' meeting room. And, the complaints began shortly after District Commissioner Duke Levy explained the proposal to supervisors.

Ronnie Cuevas, who ran unsuccessfully for the District 2 Supervisor's seat, which includes Pearlinton, said Pearlinton already has a separate fire, water and sewerage district, and he didn't think the county Wastewater District could take over responsibility.

He also claimed that the District wanted to take in Pearlinton because it needs a certain number of lower income people to qualify for the federal grants. "If we need sewerage, then we should put water in with it too," he said.

Others complained that in addition to the $35-a-month charge for sewerage, residents would see an increase in electricity needed to generate the grinders that will send the raw sewage to the treatment plant.

Dr. Robert Travnick, with the State Health Department, said long-term health benefits of the plan would outweigh the initial costs to property owners.

"This is a dream come true for someone who has worked to control communicable disease," said Travnick.

He said Hancock County "is one of the most beautiful places in the world but some places smell like a cesspool."

Travnick said the county is being polluted by raw sewage being allowed to run into ditches and streams.

And, he said septic tanks being used in the area may fail because of the soil conditions, and there is a danger of polluting the groundwater.

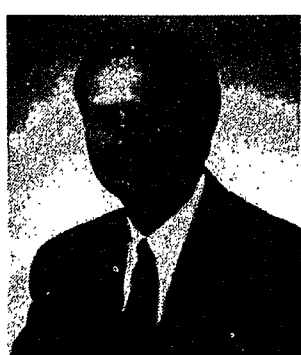

"You're sitting on top of your own Love Canal," Travnick warned.

Solid Waste Director questioned about landfill

BY ED LEPOMA

At least three members of the Hancock County School board grilled Les Fillingame, Chairman of the Hancock County Solid Waste District on the proposal to locate a landfill in the Standard Community.

School Supt. Myrna Bourgeois told Fillingame that state law won't allow county school boards to sell more than 100 acres of Section 16 land to any person or agency at one time.

The Solid Waste District now leases about 45 acres at Standard for a rubbish site, and had proposed buying that and another 91-plus acres adjacent to it for the landfill.

Fillingame said he had been made aware of the 100-acre limit, and the Solid Waste District would now attempt to purchase the landfill site from the School Board, while continuing to lease the rubbish site. The School Board, in turn, would use funds from the sale to purchase other Section 16 land, and would share in revenue from any commercial dumping that takes place at the rubbish site, now operated by Trans-American. Bourgeois said the School Board wants to know who it's dealing with—the Board of Supervisors or the Solid Waste District.

"As far as we're concerned, we have a lease (for the rubbish site) with the Board," said Bourgeois. "We think the Board violated its lease by turning over the rubbish site to the District." (The District then contracted with Trans-American of Mobile, Ala., and that firm began managing the rubbish site last September.

Fillingame said supervisors created the Solid Waste District following state mandates to do so in 1992, and turned over the problem of disposing of the county's solid waste to the District.

Larry Peterson, another school board member, cited a section of state law that says Section 16 land can't be sold unless it's used to create an industrial park or amusement area.

"The Solid Waste District is charged with establishing a solid waste disposal plan for Hancock County," said Fillingame. He said the District has opinions from the Secretary of State's Office and he could get one from the state attorney general approving the sale of the land at Standard because it was supervisors' intentions to lease the entire site.

Tony Caston, a school board member who lives near the Standard site, said he "was trying to keep an open mind" about the site. He said the county does need a landfill, "but we don't need to make a decision at this time."

Caston said maybe residents should be allowed to vote on the site, if the School Board decides to sell the land at Standard. He said he would like data published about other sites that were under consideration and suggested that NASA officials should be approached about locating a landfill in the Stennis Space Center buffer zone.

Caston also complained that the Solid Waste District was composed of the mayors of Bay St. Louis and Waveland and one county representative (County Comptroller Patty Greer). If Standard is being considered, he said the District Supervisor or "someone from the northern end of the county" should be on the board.

As an alternative, Caston said, maybe supervisors should cancel the project at Standard, and continue sending its solid waste to Pecan Grove.

He also suggested that supervisors mandate recycling legislation in attempts to reduce the county's solid waste stream.

Merle Martin, who lives in Standard, said she is concerned about the truck traffic that would be generated if Standard opens, and the damage caused by heavy loads being hauled on rural roads. She said she school children in buses drive over the same roads, and she was worried about their safety.

Fillingame said because of the lack of zoning in the rural areas of Hancock County there is no weight limits on country roads.

But, he said, if some kind of comprehensive zoning plan was approved by the incoming Board of Supervisors, and Standard was given permission to operate, it would be classified as an Industrial Zone, and supervisors would probably improve roads, as a priority.

Martin complained that the Solid Waste District doesn't seem to have to follow the law. "Every time somebody bring up a new objection, you say you can get around it," she complained.

"We're not above the law," Fillingame countered. "We're a public entity."

Martin said, "People are having a fit" in Pass Christian over Waste Management's decision to haul in solid-waste from New Orleans.

"We don't want out-of-state garbage," said Martin.

Fillingame said the municipalities protesting operations at Pecan Grove have no legal recourse because Trans-American privately owns the landfill and permit. It has 100 acres permitted for the landfill in Pecan Grove and purchased a total 1,200 acres.

In several test cases, Fillingame explained the courts have ruled that municipalities cannot interfere with a business engaged in Interstate Commerce.

Fillingame maintained that Standard would be different. "The supervisors or the Solid Waste District would hold title to the landfill, so it could control who dumps there," said Fillingame.

Another resident wanted to know how much the District is paying Trans-American to manage the rubbish site.

"We're not paying them anything right now," said Fillingame. In fact, they're operating at a loss.

He said Trans-American has established commercial user fees at the rubbish site that would generate some revenues, which, by its lease, would have to be split with the School Board.

One Standard citizens, who says he lives by the rubbish and landfill site, said he thought the landfill's purpose was to save the county money, not to generate money. Why can't the county run it? Why does a private firm have to operate it for profit?

Fillingame answered that the county does not have the professionals or the equipment that would be needed to run a landfill.

"It's like building roads or bridges or any other kind of contract," said Fillingame.

"We're hiring somebody to do a job that we're not qualified to do."

Fillingame added that it would be uneconomical to reserve Standard strictly for Hancock County's solid waste.

"The waste stream isn't large enough," said Fillingame, and "Trans-American couldn't make a profit."

tion Antiques in Bay St. Louis. She hasn't been completely out of the government picture. For the last 10 years, she has served on the Board of the Gulf Regional Planning Commission.

"I like to think it has broadened my scope, and will help me to be a better supervisor," said Cowand. "We need to rely more on the expertise that is available through the planning commission."

Cowand said supervisors can use the important board "as a source for landing more federal and state grants and on other important issues, like zoning." "We need to use it to do some long-term planning for the county," said Cowand. "We need to stay ahead of the curb instead of always playing catch up. It always cost more money to play catch-up."

She believes, like the other supervisors, that "zoning" and "the need for more housing in the near future."

"I think most people realize that this is for their own protection," said Cowand.

"We might not need as stringent zoning north of I-10 as we do south of I-10, but we have to look at it across the board."

Cowand said she is a big advocate of public hearings "on everything."

"I value people's opinion and input," she adds.

Cowand was in the audience last Wednesday night when the Hancock County Solid Waste District held "an educational forum" to explain to residents the need to open a county landfill in Standard.

"I think the general consensus was that most people don't oppose a county landfill," said Cowand. "But, if it's put at Standard, they don't want any solid waste coming here from other counties in the state or from nearby parishes in Louisiana."

"It should be operated as a county landfill. I think it would lengthen the projected life of the landfill, if that happens."

Cowand said the other alternative is to continue dumping the county's solid waste at Pecan Grove in nearby Pass Christian in western Harrison County.

"Maybe we should just continue the arrangement, and pay as we go, and not open our own landfill," she said.

Cowand also planned to attend Friday's supervisors' meeting when they hold a public hearing on plans to launch a $10 million project to extend the sewage systems into Lakeshore, Shoreline Park, Clermont Harbor and Pearlinton.

She's all in favor of requiring some kind of sewerage treatment throughout the county.

"It's criminal that we're allowing raw sewerage to run into the ditches and streams," she said.

Cowand also wants to take a look at consolidating some county services.

She was part of the drive to consolidate the tax department in Bay St. Louis with the county assessor's office. She also supported efforts to establish a county animal shelter in Waveland, and backed establishment of the county's drug task force.

"I favor any consolidation efforts that would provide better services," said Cowand. She wants to look into the possibility of consolidating the area's emergency dispatchers, and purchasing process.

Cowand said the need for a Juvenile Detention Center is "obvious."

"It needs to be near the courthouse and existing facilities," said Cowand.

She would also like to see the Coastal Family Health Center re-establish a clinic in Hancock County.

Coastal closed its clinic here at the end of last September, saying it was costing $500,000 a year to run it.

Since then, the more than 2,500 poor and elderly have been forced to go to clinics in Harrison County for an medical needs.

Cowand said she wants to meet with Coastal's directors "to see if we can work something out."

"I want to see that our underprivileged have good health care," said Cowand.

She said she would like to look at Coastal's operating budget "to see what it would actually cost to reopen a clinic for Hancock County residents."

Waveland amends budget

BY RICHARD MEEK

City workers in Waveland will not receive a pay raise as previously promised, but will be provided health benefits.

In a meeting Friday morning, the Waveland Board of Aldermen adopted an amended budget that excluded pay raises for all but four city workers. However, health insurance will be paid in full for employees.

Earlier this fall, the board had adopted a budget which provided pay raises for all city workers based on merit. But later it was revealed the city would be spending approximately $590,000 of its $800,000 in cash reserve to make up for a budget deficit.

The aldermen said at the time they were unaware they had approved a budget that called for spending nearly 75 percent of the city's reserve, and since then, have been scrambling to find ways to trim expenses and raise revenue.

The budget adopted Friday calls for expenses of $6.1 million. Projected revenue is $5.7 million, leaving a $376,000 shortfall, which will make up out of the reserve fund.

By eliminating the raises, the city saved $169,580, City Clerk Deborah Conrvey said.

Waveland Department of Streets employees will receive a raise, but those raises will not effect the budget. The city originally budgeted for 16 workers. But on Friday, the board adopted a resolution that cut that work force to 15 employees, with the money from the discontinued position being used for raises for the other employees.

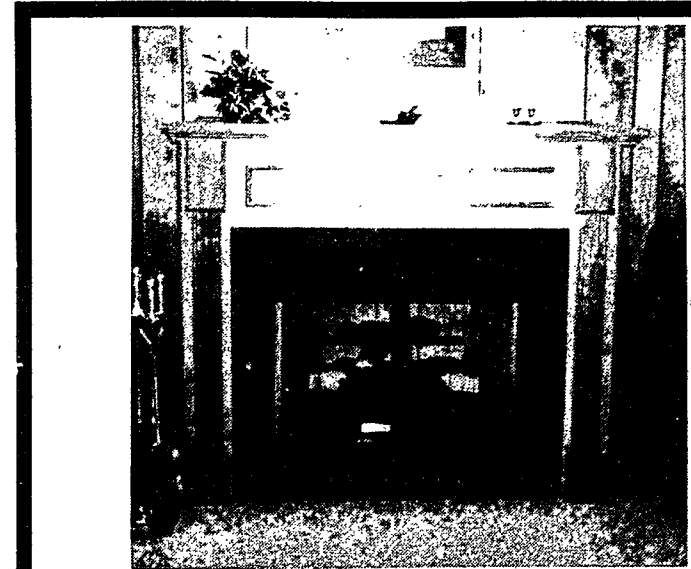

Also, the city will be spending approximately $52,000 for the upkeep of the Waveland Animal Shelter. The Hancock County Board of Supervisors is chipping in $30,000 and Bay St. Louis $18,000 for the $110,000 upkeep of the facility.

The amended budget passed by a 3-0 margin. Alderman Jay Fleuriot was absent.

"CUEVAS' QUOTES"

By Ellis C. Cuevas

It has been some time since I have seen fog as thick as it was in some areas on Thursday and Friday.

The fog has really caused some problems on highways and roadways in the area.

As motorists we need to exercise extreme caution on the roadways.

While on the subject of fog, that is really a time when two headlights are necessary on vehicles.

As I drive about the area I seem to be seeing a large number of vehicles with only one headlight operational.

It doesn't take much to check and see if your headlights are operating correctly.

The replacement of a headlight is only a few dollars compared to what it would cost if it causes an accident.

While driving during fog I have also seen a number of vehicles without lights on. Rules of the road call for headlights to be in use during foggy conditions.

A number of events are still scheduled in the community with the approach of Christmas.

This afternoon the Operation Wake Up organization will sponsor a Christmas party for ages 1-11, 2-4 p.m. at the Save Our Children Center, Nacaise Avenue, Bay St. Louis.

Operation Wake Up will also sponsor a Celebration of Lights 5 p.m., at the Martin Luther King Park, Washington Street in Bay St. Louis.

A visit from Santa is scheduled, lighting of the tree and caroling.

One of the most interesting happenings this Christmas season has been the Library System's Holiday Tree Gala.

I would like to take this opportunity to commend every entry into the event.

There were over 40 decorated trees placed about our beautiful library, and everyone appeared to have been prettier than next one.

The businesses, organizations, governmental agencies and students in our schools all did a great job in decorations and added to the beauty of the library.

I visited the library during the appearance of the Windsor Chamber Players presentation and was very impressed with their music.

I have been told the choirs from the schools were great, too.

I am sure glad I was not one of the unlucky judges for the best tree decoration in the various categories.

The tree which impressed me most was the entry from the new rose society. It was just covered with the most beautiful rose buds in just about every color under the rainbow as the saying goes. My selection of that one may have been because of the fact that at one time we had some 30 rose bushes across the front of our yard.

Any way, in case you did not have an opportunity of viewing the Christmas trees, they are scheduled to be at the library until Thursday, Dec. 21.

Christmas decorations are beautiful in Bay

I would like to take this opportunity to tell everyone how beautiful the Christmas decorations are in Bay St. Louis.

I think Mayor Eddie Favre, City Councilmen, and Jimmy Loiacano, Kay Johnson, Buz Olsen, Ronnie Vanney, Bob Travis and everyone else involved should be commended.

It just goes to show how working together can improve the atmosphere in a community. The decorations sure have helped the Christmas spirit in Bay St. Louis.

FROM THE SENATE

By Senator Trent Lott

Let the people decide

The Senate is currently considering an amendment to the Constitution of the United States which reads in its entirety, "The Congress and the States shall have power to prohibit the physical desecration of the flag of the United States."

The amendment is a response to two U.S. Supreme Court cases, Texas v. Johnson, in 1989 which struck down the Texas flag desecration statute, and United States v. Eichman in 1990 which struck down the Flag Protection Act of 1989 which Congress had enacted as a statutory response to the Johnson case. The vote in both cases was 5 to 4.

In Johnson, the Court held that the Texas flag desecration statute was unconstitutional. Texas had convicted Johnson for publicly burning an American flag as part of a political protest. The Texas statute prohibited the intentional defacing of the national flag if a person knew that his action would "seriously offend one or more persons likely to observe or discover this action."

In an amazing opinion, five Supreme Court Justices said the Texas statute was an effort to suppress the expression of an idea — in this case, opposition to certain policies of the Reagan Administration — and was, therefore, contrary to the command of the First Amendment. Four Justices dissented.

Writing on their behalf, Justice William Rehnquist said that uncritical extension of constitutional protection to the burning of the flag risks the frustration of the very purpose for which organized governments are instituted.

"The Court (majority) decides that the American flag is just another symbol, about which not only most opinions pro and con be tolerated, but for which the most minimal public respect may not be enjoined," he said.

"The government may conscript men into the Armed Forces where they must fight and perhaps die for the flag, but the government may not prohibit the public burning of the banner under which they fight."

As governor of Arkansas, Bill Clinton signed into law in 1989 a bill prohibiting the intentional desecration of the flag. When the Supreme Court declared the Texas law, and the Arkansas one like it, unconstitutional, Governor Clinton instituted an award-winning "flag respect" program in Arkansas state schools.

On Feb. 11, 1991, while he was still governor, Arkansas became the 11th of 49 states to call for a constitutional amendment on flag desecration.

Despite these previous actions, President Clinton now believes that "efforts to limit the Bill of Rights . . . for flag desecration are misguided."

This is an interesting position for a President at a time when he is asking Americans to unite behind our troops and our flag in Bosnia, at a time when 80 percent of Americans are voicing their support for the constitutional amendment, and when 49 of 50 states are demanding approval of the constitutional amendment.

Our flag is not merely a piece of fabric but a symbol of the sacrifice and hard work so many have contributed to make America a great nation.

I find it repugnant that desecration of the flag — and consequently all that it represents — is permitted. Because the Court has upheld "flag burning as a form of free speech, I believe a constitutional amendment is the only way to insure that the people, not the courts, resolve the issue of the protection of our flag. It is a decision that should be made by the people, voting state-by-state, through their state legislatures.

Senator Lott welcomes any questions and/or comments about this column. Please write to: Senator Trent Lott, 487 Russell Building, Washington, D.C. 20510 (Attention: Press Office).

EYES ON MISSISSIPPI

By Bill Minor

Gregg Phillips new state GOP director

The always-cocky Gregg Phillips took a new job last week, that of executive director of the Mississippi Republican Party, obviously no longer in running to head the state human services agency in his native Alabama.

Phillips took over the new spot running the state GOP with his usual braggadocio of how politically adept he is. "I'm the Democrats' worst nightmare," he crowed on television.

There may be some nightmares in order, but Phillips' threat to Democrats shouldn't be one of them. Phillips has a nightmare of his own to worry about as a result of his ethical dealings when he formerly was executive director of Mississippi's Department of Human Services.

The Legislative PEER Committee two weeks ago laid out a pretty strong case of an ethics violation against Phillips over the job he took immediately after leaving DHS with an outfit which got money from a contract he approved back at DHS.

The legislative investigative report dealt with more than Phillips' role, for the main thrust was of Peer's probe of LEAP, a jobs training project for welfare recipients based at Ole Miss which had been established with funding from DHS. PEER was highly critical of LEAP's operations on which over $6 million had been spent the past three years.

Phillips' ethical problem is that he contracted directly after leaving DHS to work for Centec Learning which provides mobile training labs for the LEAP program. Moreso, the PEER probe shows Phillips in 1993 signed a modification to the LEAP contract with DHS that permitted Centec to get an $878,000 deal with the LEAP program.

There was no board or superior person over Phillips to approve his action signing the contract. So the conflict of interest arises in the eyes of the PEER probers, because Phillips went directly to work at $7,000 per month under a contract with Centec (then a division of Synesis and now called Mergent) when he left DHS last April.

Officials with Centec informed PEER that the work Phillips was doing with them was not directly connected to the mobile learning labs under the LEAP contract. However, whether or not Phillips benefited directly from the DHS contract is immaterial in the eyes of state ethics law and state constitutional Section 209, the tough old conflict of interest provision.

Section 209, as several other officials have ruefully learned in the past, prohibits any official benefitting "directly or indirectly" within one year form a contract he approved before leaving that position.

PEER cited state ethics statute 25-4-101 which, it pointed out, prohibits even the appearance of conflict of interest. Phillips' behavior, the committee said, "at the very least" created the appearance of impropriety.

All the findings of PEER were handed over to the state Ethics Commission for further investigation and initial indications were that the ethics body will have more to say about Phillips' ethics problems.

Although it has been amply clear in the past that the Section 209 violations applied to elected officials or state legislators benefitting from contracts they approved, the Phillips case would raise an important question on whether that same law also applies to executive officials who do not report to a board or commission.

Incidentally, the initial contract Phillips had with Centec going through September, 1995, was not renewed. He had been making a strong bid to get the top Human Services job in Alabama where he had formerly been a GOP fund raiser before he came to Mississippi in 1991. Apparently because of the PEER investigation, Alabama Gov. Fob James backed off naming Phillips. This put him back in the job market.

When he got on TV after being named to the state GOP job (at the behest of Gov. Kirk Fordice) Phillips brushed off the ethics questions raised by PEER as a Democrat plot to get him. Obviously he ignored the fact that three Republican legislators were among the PEER committee members who approved the findings against him.

Maybe Gregg Phillips can do for the Mississippi Republican Party what Ed Cole did for the state Democratic Party — practically destroy it. Perhaps Phillips will become a nightmare, not for the Democrats, but the Republicans.

IN CONGRESS

By Rep. Gene Taylor

Maritime Act passes House

A vital step to restore and revitalize the U.S. Maritime and Shipbuilding Industry and save American taxpayers $125 million at the same time, received overwhelming bipartisan support in the House, announced Congressman Gene Taylor.

"I come from 'shipbuilding country,'" Taylor said. "The survival of South Mississippi shipbuilders and their supplies depends upon the survival of the American Merchant Marine."

Taylor said the bill promotes American jobs, assures shipping and trade competitiveness, strengthens national defense and shipbuilding base, and renews the shipbuilding loan guarantees which he initiated last year.

A strong American Maritime

Industry is essential to U.S. military readiness and seafaring operations. Merchant Marines transport medical, food, fuel, weapons and defense supplies to our servicemen in times of war.

"The Merchant Marine is the cornerstone of our national defense," said Taylor. "They play a vital role in the rapid deployment and protection of our troops."

The fast sealift currently being built in American shipyards is used by the U.S. Navy. Taylor said these ships alone cannot fulfill American needs in times of war.

Without this bill, the American Flag Merchant Marine ships would disappear from our oceans. The bill reduces the downward spiral the Merchant Marine has taken in past years.

It takes a little effort NOT to throw our litter out the window and so much effort and expense to pick it up again.

Landfill

operations of the county's rubbish site at Standard last September.

"A lot of work had to be done to clean up the place," said Harrieson. "And, we're paying personnel there (some of which were county employees whom Trans-American absorbed) and put a lot of equipment out there. But, we were willing to do this and stick it out in the hopes we could get the landfill up and running."

Harrieson said Trans-American was also committed to spending "several millions of dollars" for the construction of the landfill. He estimated initial construction would cost around $7.5 million.

Engineers with Compton Engineering, which designed, then revised plans for the Standard landfill, said the Solid Waste District should not be blamed for the scope of the hauling allowed by the contract with Trans-American.

They explained that because Mississippi dumps its hazardous waste in nearby Alabama, Louisiana and Tennessee, mutual agreements mandated between the states and federal government would allow all counties and municipalities in Mississippi and from adjoining states to haul in solid waste once a landfill is permitted anywhere in Mississippi.

They said "sheer economics" would determine who would haul into Standard.

In reality, it would not be "economically feasible" for municipalities as far away as Tupelo or Oxford to dump at Standard because the price of transporting and dumping would be "astronomical" engineers said.

Les Fillingame, chairman of the Solid Waste District, said the provision to open up the landfill at Standard (or any landfill) to embrace the entire state and nearby states is part of the requirements for gaining a permit.

He said he was never concerned about who might dump at Standard because, "it just wouldn't be an issue."

Fillingame agreed with engineers that it would be too costly to ship solid waste to Standard from way upstate or remote areas outside the state.

At the Wednesday night meeting, Fillingame trotted out the engineers who designed the proposed landfill, a representative of the state's environmental quality department, and a corporate vice president with Trans-American Waste Industries, Inc., out of Houston, the firm given the contract to operate the landfill, once it's opened.

They faced a skeptical, but attentive and orderly audience of about 60 people, including concerned citizens who live in Standard, several members of the county school board, and incumbent Dist. 3 Supervisor Howard Lizana, who has claimed "misconceptions and rumors" about Standard was one of the factors leading to his defeat in the November elections.

Also present were: Lisa Coward, who defeated Lizana; Myrna Bourgeois, current Superintendent of the Hancock County School System; and Terry Randolph, who defeated Bourgeois in her re-election bid last November.

The Solid Waste District wants to purchase a little more than 95 acres of Section 16 land from the County School Board to open a landfill at Standard. It already has leased another 45 acres in the area for a rubbish site, and Trans-American took over operations there at the beginning of September.

Fillingame contends the county has already expended in excess of $100,000 for site and soil testing and the landfill's design at Standard, and has tentative approval from federal and state regulating agencies to open it.

The county's solid waste is currently being trucked to the Pecan Grove landfill in Pass Christian in western Harrison County at a cost to the county of about $20 a ton. But, the county's contract with Waste Management Inc., which owns the Pecan Grove facility, expires in March, and the fee for accepting Hancock's solid waste may be increased, Fillingame said.

He claims the county's disposal cost could be cut in half—to $10 a ton—if the Standard landfill is opened. And, the county could reap an additional $7.8 million a year over the next 20 if it allows other nearby counties in Mississippi and Louisiana to use Standard.

After giving this background information, Fillingame said he organized the public forum "because of a lot of concerns brought up in the heat of recent campaigns, and to clear up any suspicions people might have."

He turned the meeting over to Lloyd Compton, of Compton Engineering, who helped design the Standard landfill. Compton used a series of slides to show soils present at Standard, and to illustrate how a landfill operates.

Compton said, at the request of the Board of Supervisors, his firm conducted tests to locate a suitable site for a county landfill after the 29-acre Catahoula landfill was closed down in 1989.

Based on testing, Compton said Standard was chosen because it was next to the county's rubbish site, which was already under lease, it had controllable drainage because it sits on a bluff that provides natural drainage, and there were limited residences around the site.

The design for the landfill was completed in 1990, Compton said, but the federal government's Resource Recovery Act, which passed Congress the same year, mandated substantial changes in how a landfill should be operated.

Following the 1990 legislation, states mandated counties and cities to submit plans for disposing of their solid waste, and for reducing the waste stream by recycling, Compton explained.

"The new regulations by the state reduced from over 100 to 15 possible locations for landfills around the state, Compton said.

He said supervisors approved the formation of the county's Solid Waste District in 1992, and that agency instructed Compton to redesign the landfill to meet the more stringent federal and state regulations.

Compton assured the audience that the combination of the special plastic liners required in the landfill and the clays present in the soil would prevent any leachate from entering the water table, and no contaminated drainage would reach natural bayous or streams.

Next up was Michael Harrieson from Houston, Trans-American's director of corporate development.

He also used slides to show the operations of the Chastang Landfill that Trans-American operates outside Mobile, Ala.

"This is not a hole in the ground like your uncle used to dump in," Harrieson said.

"This is a very precise science, that requires professionals at all levels, and costs a lot of money to operate."

He said stringent federal and state regulations control what waste is dumped, and how it is to be treated. He emphasized that Standard would be permitted as a non-hazardous waste site.

Billy Warden, with the Mississippi State Department of Environmental Quality, said Mississippi is the 11th state in the nation approved to implement federal regulations that dictate how a landfill is operated.

He said the permit to operate a landfill at Standard has been granted to the Board of Supervisors, but can be transferred to the Solid Waste District.

However, before a final operating permit is granted, Warden said it would be reviewed by his staff, and the seven-member Mississippi Environmental Quality Board.

Philip Moran spoke on behalf of the new Board of Supervisors. He said the new board had also been briefed on the proposed project.

"This may be the biggest project to ever happen in Hancock County," said Moran. "It represents a grand opportunity."

The actual tenant was not disclosed, but these details were pieced together:

- The Port and Harbor Commission and some supervisors have been working with the Mississippi Department of Economic and Community Development to lure a major manufacturer to Port Bienville.

- The manufacturer has made several trips to tour the area, and has indicated an interest to locate its plant here or in some area of South Carolina. Mississippi Gov. Kirk Fordice has also been involved in the negotiations.

However, Walters indicated that one hurdle to overcome is that South Carolina can offer a 25-year exemption on property tax. Under Mississippi law, only a 10-year exemption can be offered.

There is some irony involved, since several years ago, South Carolina won out over Hancock County for another large manufacturer.

- As an incentive to lure the manufacturer to Hancock County, the governor, through the MDECD, has pledged to come forward with $33 million in incentive funds. The fund would come out of the Major Impact Authority Funds, Walters said. He said those funds may only be activated to enhance infrastructure and site improvements for projects exceeding $300 million in any one phase.

The fund has only been activated once, when the state committed $25 million to a solid rocket booster plant in Iuka. Congress eventually killed the project, although the state had already spent the money.

The county was asked to issue $5 million in revenue bonds, as its part of the bargain. There would be no increase in property tax millage to service the bonds.

Walters said he estimated the interest rate on those bonds would be in the neighborhood of six percent, and that he expected the county to be repaid in full in less than 10 years.

The total would allow the needed infrastructure repairs (roads, drainage, lighting, etc) to begin.

"You won't recognize (Port Bienville) by the time everything would be completed," said Walters, who added a second entrance to the industrial park may also be included. Currently, the only entrance is off of Lower Bay Road.

- In turn, the manufacturer plans an initial investment of $330-million, and would employ about 250 people once operations get underway. According to Walters, the company would be bringing in only about "20 to 30 employees," with the remainder of the work force coming from the county. "These are mid- to high-tech jobs," Walters said.

- Ultimately, the manufacturer plans a $1.1 billion investment, and would employ at least 750 people.

Seymour explained that he needed a commitment from the old board to issue the bonds because the manufacturer was to make a decision before the end of the year, and new supervisors won't be sworn into office until Jan. 2.

"I would hate to jeopardize this project," said Seymour. "I am 110 percent in favor of it."

"We may never see the likes of this project again," said Walters.

He said rejection of the resolution may have eliminated the county from consideration "very quickly."

"(Rejection) could have been a deal breaker," Walters said. "When you're down to two states, the inducements offered by each state are large and significant."

District 3 Supervisor Howard Lizana said he had not been briefed on the project, and he didn't want to "vote on something I don't know anything about."

Board President Michael Ladner suggested supervisors go into executive session.

Lizana objected at first, saying he didn't know why the project couldn't be discussed publicly, but Walters said the investor wanted to keep their plans confidential.

Supervisors recessed to go into executive session, and when they returned after about 30 minutes, they passed a resolution authorizing the issuance of $5 million in revenue bonds.

The vote was 4-0. Dist. 2 Supervisor Dolph Kellor was absent and reported to be hospitalized.

"In my mind, this could be the best thing to happen in the county in a long time," Walters said. "It could be the second biggest thing to happen here since Stennis Space Center."

Walters said that Trinity Marine is currently the largest employer at Port Bienville, proving some 200 jobs. GE Plastic employs approximately 125 people.

Walters said he "feels pretty good" about the county's chances, but said he "tries not to get too excited about it."

Walters has been involved in at least two other major recruiting efforts while working for the state. One was a major steel manufacturer, the other Mercedes-Benz. The steel manufacturer landed in Arkansas, Mercedes in southeast Alabama.

"I can't put myself through that again," Walters said.

Waveland's Festival of Lights shared the Christmas spirit

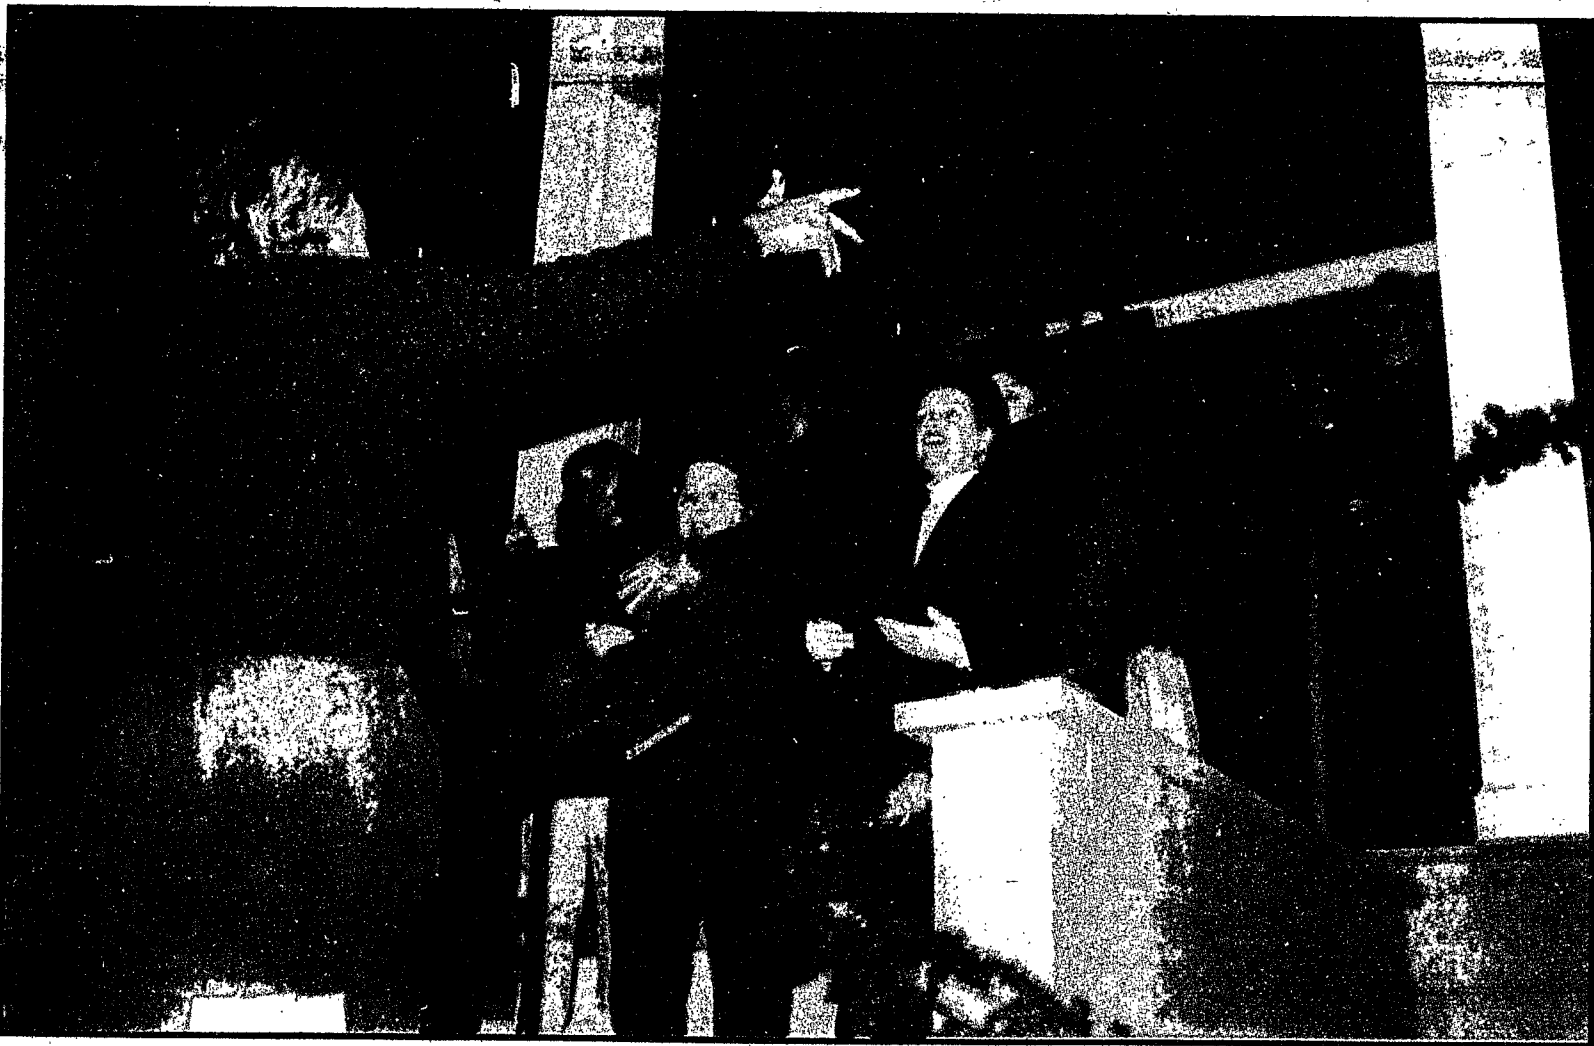

Waveland Elementary third graders were the last to entertain the crowd that gathered in front of City Hall in Waveland with Christmas carols. Despite the cold, there was a very good turnout for Waveland's Festival of Lights. From cookies to homemade egg nog, hot chocolate to sno-balls (yes, sno-balls), the Christmas spirit was shared by all.

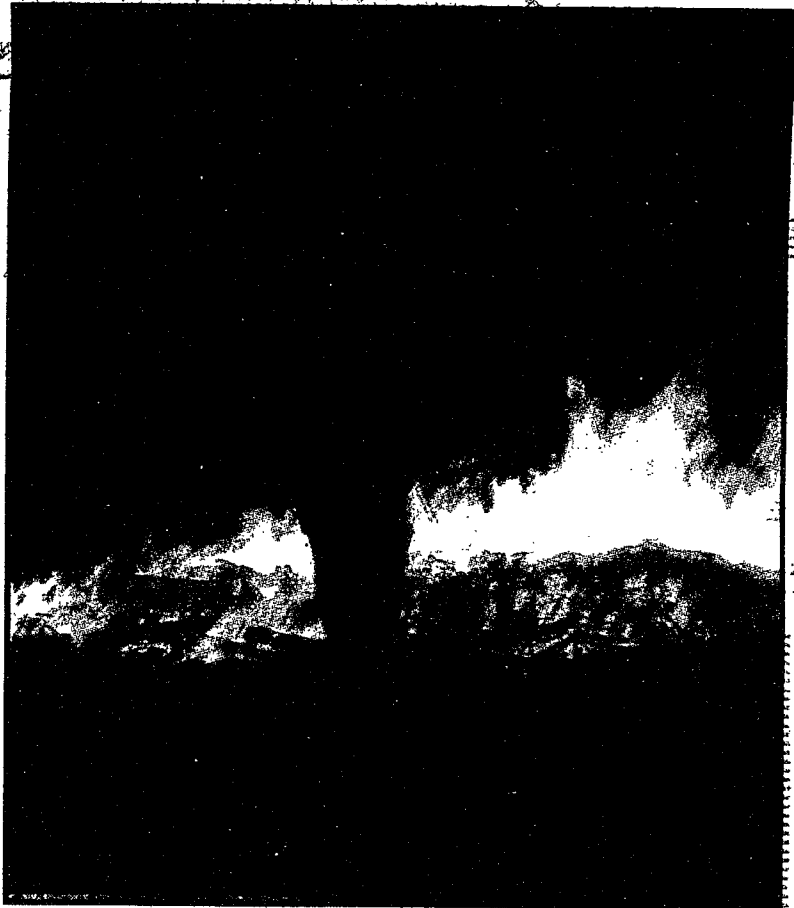

Santa spent the chilly evening entertaining young people, each of whom presented Santa with a long Christmas wish list.

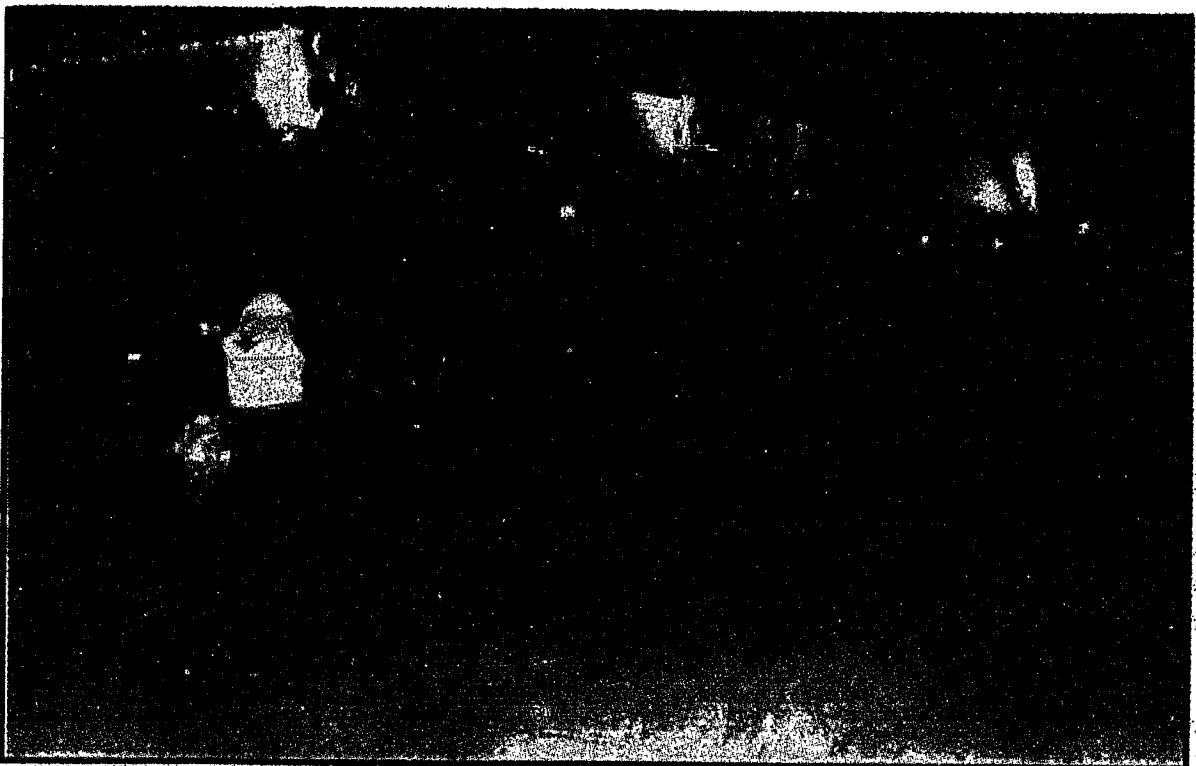

Echo staff photos by Richard Meek and Kelly Blanchard

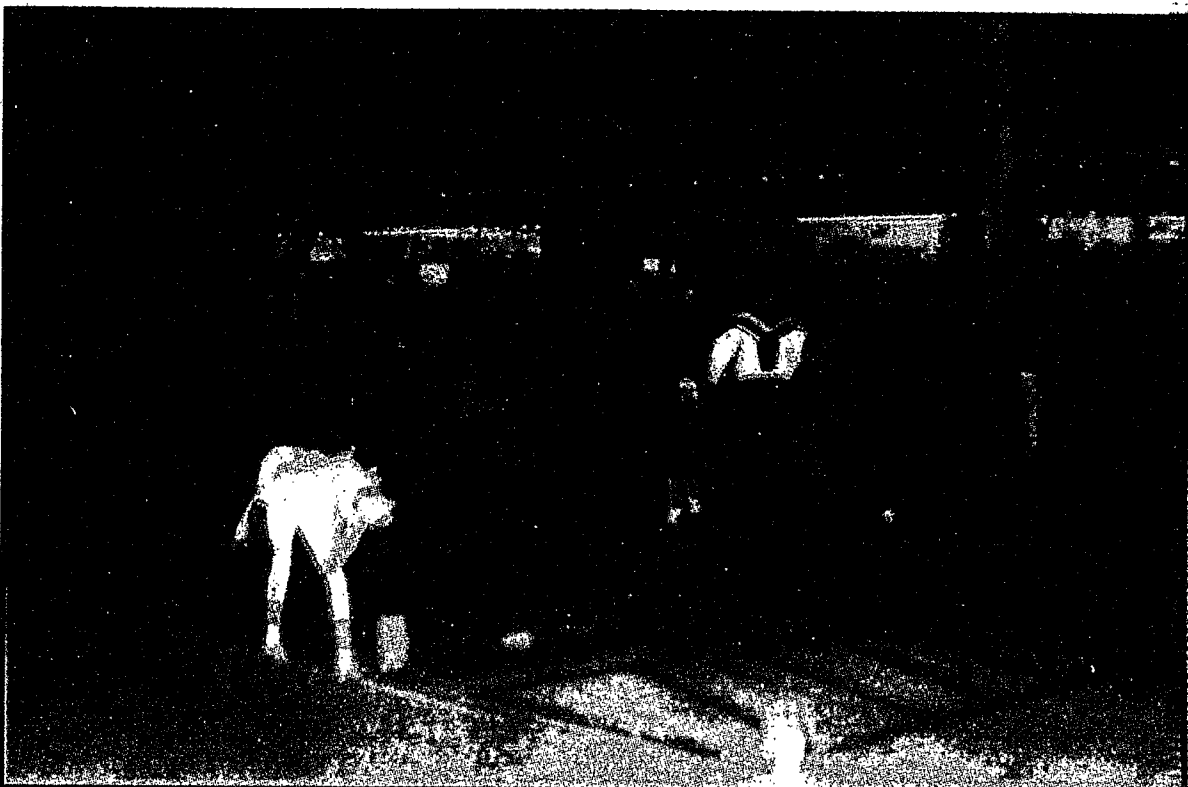

St. Clare Catholic Church Choir started off the evening of celebration by singing Christmas carols for the crowd on the steps of city hall.

A cold child stands near the bonfire on the beach at the end of Coleman Ave. which concluded the festivities of Waveland's Festival of Lights.

Despite the cold weather, many people came out to enjoy the sights and sounds of the City of Waveland's Festival of Lights.

A lot of folks sought out the warmth of the shops open on Coleman Ave. in Waveland. Others looked for those who were serving the hot drinks.

Until now,

Frank had to search for cellular selection.

Frank went all over town to compare cellular phones and service options. He had trouble finding more than a couple of phones in one place, and the few price plans he saw left a lot to be desired. Now there's Century Cellunet, the one-stop store with dozens of phones, accessories, gadgets and service plans — all under one roof. Plus, at Century Cellunet there's someone who can answer all of Frank's questions about service. So, now he can choose a phone that fits his lifestyle, and a service plan that won't wreck his wallet. You can, too. Visit Century Cellunet's new store — your one stop for cellular selection and service. Opening Saturday, December 16, 1995 at the Market Town Shopping Center, 295 Hwy 90, Suite 6 in Bay St. Louis, Mississippi.

CLUBS, AUXILIARIES

Mississippi
Homemaker Volunteers

November and December found Learning Ladies Club (MHV) busy with many civic and social activities, such as dressing dolls and bears for the Salvation Army, sewing and decorating a tree for Children's Hospital in Jackson, participating in Hancock County Library System's Holiday Tree Gala, collecting clothing and housewares for Hope Haven, and helping in various fund raisers for Hope Haven.

Some members teach arts and crafts at Dunbar Village, while others help with weekly refreshments and bingo games and prizes at Hotel Reed Nursing Center.

Non-perishable items are collected at each regular and council meeting for the Food Pantry. Members also volunteer at the VA Hospital, Chamber of Commerce, St. Vincent de Paul Thrift Store, local schools and Hancock Medical Center.

Some provide transportation to doctors and hospitals or cook meals for shut-ins or phone senior citizens to check on them.

A highlight of November was a trip to Stone County, where home economist Judy Breland conducted a tour of a fish farm and nature trail, and club members took a hay ride to an old homestead and museum and saw quilts being made.

The club's annual Christmas luncheon was Dec. 13 at Torgy's with 17 members and a guest attending.

Next meeting is Wednesday, Jan. 17. For information, call 467-5456.

The commercial award went to Lagniappe Orleans, 4300 Aloha Circle, Jettie Bozant, owner.

First place, Mrs. Gertrude Wadington, 2434 Airport Drive; second place, Herman and DeLores Glazier, 7927 Hilo Way; and third place, Charles and Carolyn Butler, 57145 Diamondhead Drive East.

The garden club appreciates the efforts of these citizens and congratulates them on their excellent results.

Guitarist Giovanni DeChiaro will be the featured guest artist at two special Christmas Eve concerts at St. Paul Catholic Church in Pass Christian. Both concerts are free and open to the public.

DeChiaro will perform selections from his new Christmas CD, "The Sounds of Christmas on Guitar," at the church's annual Music as Prayer program at 2:30 p.m., a program which also features the St. Paul Catholic Church Choir, and he will present a second concert at 11:30 p.m., immediately preceding the Christmas Midnight Mass.

DeChiaro has long been a favorite of Coastians, performing regularly as a soloist throughout the area. During the summer he played for the Pope in Rome during an European tour, and he has become famous for his original transcriptions of classical and popular music for classical guitar.

DeChiaro is a professor of music at the University of Southern Mississippi and is founder and director of the USM Guitar Orchestra.

Mississippi Christmas ornaments

Christmas trees in Mississippi may now be adorned with the eighth edition of the original Mississippi Christmas ornament, according to Martin Miazza, designer of the exclusive series.

The 1995 ornament, featuring a Mississippi steamboat, is available in either polished pewter or in pewter with a 14-karat gold overlay.

All of the Mississippi ornaments, with the exception of the first edition, are oval cutouts approximately 2 1/4 x 2 1/4" and may be hung on the Christmas tree or worn on a cord as jewelry during the holiday season. Each ornament comes with a free gift box.

Miazza, who is celebrating 30 years of business operation since 1965, says he is fortunate to have Maurice Milleur reproduce his designs each year. Milleur, a native of Belgium, has lived in the South for the past 20 years where he has earned a national reputation for his handmade pewter jewelry. He is now a U.S. citizen.

The first edition of the Mississippi ornament is bell-shaped and came out in 1988, featuring the Biloxi Light-house. The next year depicted the state bird, the Mockingbird. In 1990, the ornament was a pine branch with cone; 1991 featured our state flower, the Magnolia; in 1992 the ornament showed a cotton boll; the 1993 ornament showed an open Dogwood blossom and last year's ornament displayed the stately Live Oak tree.

For information, contact Miazza at 1-800-476-1208.

Current issues are $9.95 in polished pewter and $14.95 with the gold overlay. A limited number of the other editions is also available.

Holiday hassles don't have to include the kids

By M.E. Williams
The shopping. The cooking. The travel.

Just when you think you've finally got the Christmas season all wrapped up, you remember another aspect of the holiday hustle and bustle: children, out of school and in need of entertainment.

Lynell Rogers, assistant professor of family and consumer sciences at the University of Southern Mississippi, said just like the rest of the Christmas season, planning can keep peace on the homefront and add to the holiday spirit.

"The main thing is knowing what to expect and preparing for it," said Rogers, who specializes in child development and family relations issues.

Translation: Know when your child will be out of school and plan ahead to keep those days interesting and fun, she said.

"Children are pretty good at finding and making their own entertainment if they have what they need available," Rogers said.

"You can help yourself out by thinking ahead and making sure certain items are in the house and ready to go when needed."

Rogers recommends a busy box filled with a ream of paper, new markers, new crayons "with pointed tips" and a few nudges to get imaginations going. Rubber stamps and ink pads can help children create wrapping paper for Christmas gifts or their own Christmas cards. Colored sand creations are another option. Make-at-home dough can provide hours of fun.

Other tips:

• Include the children on all parts of the holiday.

"It may be easier to finish the shopping and wrap the presents without an extra set of hands, but that is part of the Christmas tradition," Rogers said.

"Including children in those memory-building activities around the holidays makes family traditions their traditions, too. It gives them a feeling of belonging and a sense of accomplishment when they participate. And a lot of times, it's fun for everybody — parents and children."

The same goes for cooking, she said. Small children can help on some things while older children can often be put in charge of an entire dish or baking project.

• Have the children create a special family movie or album in time for Christmas. Rogers recommends use of the camcorder or camera be delegated to older children, but everyone can help with script preparation, props, acting, drawing and other activities associated with compiling a scrapbook or video. No equipment? Disposable still cameras are easy to use and usually affordable.

• Study holiday customs from other places. Libraries are wonderful places to find children's books and other resources to introduce children to what Christmas is like in other lands. There also may be some related videos available.

• Plan a day trip. Special events dot the holiday season — some aimed at young audiences. Check listings early and make needed arrangements to attend, Rogers said. Many are free and can be a nice break from traditional Christmas chores.

• Check the TV listing and enjoy quality holiday programming as a family. "Holiday specials are often geared toward the family, so why not sit down and make it a family time?" Rogers said.

• Form babysitting cooperatives to give children a change of scenery and parents a little private time.

"It helps all the parents involved because it gives each a chance to get some tasks done they simply cannot do with their children — even if it's just to enjoy a long, hot bubble bath," Rogers said.

"It also helps children build their socialization skills and it builds family relationships and friendships, in addition to providing a convenience and a help to parents."

Cooperatives also allow the parent-in-charge notice to plan a special event or activity, Rogers said.

You might be a Redneck if . . .

If you went to your family reunion to meet women, you might be a Redneck, according to popular country comedian Jeff Foxworthy.

If you come to the Coliseum to hear Jeff Foxworthy, you might be a fan of backwoods humor that never fails to bring a smile to audiences' faces. David Letterman calls him "the best comic in America today."

Jeff Foxworthy will perform his special brand of comedy at the Mississippi Coast Coliseum for one performance only, Friday, Dec. 29 at 8 p.m.

Star of the ABC Saturday night sitcom "The Jeff Foxworthy Show," Jeff has risen to the height of success after the phenomenal Double Platinum sales of his album "You Might Be A Redneck If . . .". His current album on Warner Brother records, "Games People Play," is already certified platinum as well.

Special guests are Bill Engvall and Thomas Brown.

Tickets are available at the Coliseum Box Office and at all TicketMaster outlets, or charge by phone, 1-800-488-5252.
